Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

This row of six two-story, two-bay wide Italianate-style brick houses with shed roofs and simple, scroll-sawn bracketed cornices were probably built c. 1875 – 1885. They are typical of a type of house seen particularly in southwest Baltimore that is only two rooms deep, but sits on a high basement containing the kitchen. None of the houses retain their original brick facades, which were always painted. The entire row has been covered with formstone, which has obscured all original details, including the cornice.

The houses are two stories in height, two rooms deep and there is no backbuilding, the kitchen being located in the basement. The houses are probably constructed in common bond and were originally painted. Each house has a single hooded chimney located at the rear corner of the house. The shed roofs were probably capped by a simple wooden cornice consisting of a crown molding supported by small scroll-sawn brackets or simple grooved modillions. All of the cornices were removed when the formstone covering was put on.

The tall, narrow window and door openings probably had segmentally arched brick lintels with plain tympanums and wood sills. None of the original 2/2 sash survive and all windows are filled with 1/1 replacement sash. Doorways have single-light transoms, but no original doors survive. The houses sit on high basements, lit by a tall sash. Each house is reached by six concrete steps and most have a street entrance to the basement as well.

Builder/Architect

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

This group of houses significant as representing the level of architectural stylishness builders were willing to give to small street houses in the late nineteenth century and is testament to the fact that there was no stigma attached to small street living. The houses were built according to a pattern that was quite common to the city's working class neighborhoods of the period c. 1870 to 1910. Recognizing that workers held different levels of jobs (and pay), builders created a hierarchy of house sizes (and prices) in the new neighborhoods going up to serve the expanding factory districts ringing the harbor and northeast and southwest of the central city. Builders acquired anywhere from an eighth to a half of a city block and built 14' to 15'-wide three-bay-wide, two-story houses on the main streets, and smaller, 11' to 13'-wide two-bay-wide, two-story houses on the narrower streets bisecting the blocks. Typically, in this period, main street houses might sell for $1,200 - $1,500; small street houses for $700 - $900.

Occasionally, the builder retained ownership of his small street houses to provide income for himself as rental properties. In this way people of varying means could afford to live in the same block. If they couldn't afford the approximately $750 purchase price of the small street houses, then they could afford the $8 or so a month it would cost to rent one, while they saved to be able to buy their own home later.

The houses are especially significant because of their proximity to the Baltimore & Ohio railroad yards and related industries and to the slaughterhouses of southwest Baltimore and their related industries, particularly the William Wilkens & Co. Curled Hair Manufactory, one of the largest employers in the area. Moderately-priced housing was built to provide homes for the mainly German immigrants who came to southwest Baltimore to work in these rapidly expanding industries in the decades after the Civil War.
